New York, NY — During inter partes review before the Patent Trial and Appeal Board (PTAB), Finnavations recently disclaimed all of the claims of U.S. Patent No. 8,132,720, a patent related to a personal financial management system for tracking transactions, and requested adverse judgment in the inter partes review proceeding. In April, the PTAB granted Askeladden's petition for inter partes review of the patent after finding that Askeladden established a reasonable likelihood that all claims were invalid. On July 18, 2017, the PTAB granted Finnavations' request and entered adverse judgment against Finnavations with respect to all claims of the '720 patent.

Askeladden's Patent Challenge Committee—through the Patent Quality Initiative—chose to petition the PTAB for review of the '720 patent as part of efforts to address poor quality patents in the financial services industry.

"The inter partes review process is essential for dealing with low-quality patents," said Sean Reilly, General Counsel of Askeladden. "Finnavations' decision to disclaim all of the claims of its patent and request adverse judgment is another example of how the PTAB process can effectively address low-quality patents asserted in wasteful lawsuits against financial services companies and other businesses."

The '720 patent had been used in infringement cases against more than a dozen financial services companies, and was previously challenged by Unified Patents, but that petition was denied by the PTAB.

Askeladden was represented in the inter partes review proceeding by Maynard, Cooper & Gale, P.C.
